(784.1) Building Resilience at Your Co-op – Lou Green

Succeeding in today's electric industry requires more than the safe delivery of reliable and affordable energy. It requires resilience. This highly interactive course will define resilience, how building it is vital for cooperatives now and discuss the role of the supervisor in developing resilience on their teams.

Participants will discuss the supervisor's role in building resilience in such areas as power supply, support of electric vehicles, cybersecurity, and the changing co-op workforce. The course closes with a focus on personal resilience and how it can be built on an individual level as well as at the cooperative.

What you will learn:

- Describe several factors driving change at cooperatives today.
- Explore additional resources for supporting resilience at your cooperative.
- Strategize ways to ensure your cooperative can continue to operate after disruption occurs.
- Assess your obstacles to personal resilience.
- Build resilience at the team and co-op level.
- Lead with a mindset of learning and growth.

Leadership Skills Assessment

Drawn from the Electric Cooperative Employee Competencies, our Leadership Skills Assessment was designed to help you understand which of NRECA's supervisory, management and leadership courses and events may be most appropriate for you.
